

ARTICLE

Save Email Print

Analysis: China property buyers go global as yuan rises

By Sinead Cruise and Lee Chyen Yee
LONDON/HONG KONG | Thu Jul 1, 2010 1:05am BST

(Reuters) - China's notorious property bubble could become its next big export with a stronger yuan giving its newly rich the buying power to splash out in the world's most sought-after property markets.

Buoyed by hopes of gains in the yuan after its dollar peg was shed on June 19, Chinese investors are chasing discounted apartments from London to Singapore with a view to reducing their exposure to an overheated domestic market.

"I think you will start to see more strength in that currency and that will give further impetus to look elsewhere for investments," said James Moss, managing director of upmarket UK real estate services company Curzon Investment Property.

"The whole economic situation (in China) is prone to change and so people are looking for a safe haven for their money," said Moss, noting his

"The whole economic situation (in China) is prone to change and so people are looking for a safe haven for their money," said Moss, noting his client base was now 75 percent Chinese, from 95 percent expatriate UK investors five years ago.

Despite vast state wealth and one of the world's strongest economies, China's influence on overseas real estate markets has so far been eclipsed by Middle Eastern investors, private equity funds and other sovereign buyers from South Korea or Singapore.

Chinese property investors have so far mostly confined their acquisitions to domestic markets, pushing average prices up by 77 percent in five years and forcing the government to enact tough measures to keep homes affordable.

With property tightening measures at home and the value of its currency set to firm, analysts see more buyers branching out into overseas markets that promise attractive gains with fewer restrictions.

EXPORTING THE BUBBLE

China abandoned a 23-month-old peg to the dollar earlier in June and, even though analysts do not expect the currency to be fully convertible any time soon, further appreciation is likely, boosting the overseas purchasing power of Chinese investors.

The People's Bank of China has said exchange rate reform would be gradual and that it will ensure the yuan could both rise and fall depending on market conditions.

The yuan is seen up 2.4 percent against the dollar by year's end, hitting 6.67 yuan, a Reuters poll showed.

Data from real estate broker Knight Frank showed more than one in 10 new-build residential properties in London were sold to Chinese or Hong Kong buyers in the year to March, the highest share of the market by any offshore investors.

In Hong Kong, a fifth of luxury apartments are purchased by mainland Chinese, said Alva To, head of consulting for North Asia at property broker DTZ (DTZ.L), citing industry figures.

Recommend

Digg This

Tweet This

Share on LinkedIn

Share on Facebook

Related News

PRESS DIGEST - Hong Kong - July 14
Jul 15, 2010

China's Glorious Property cautious on H2 outlook
Jul 5, 2010

China yuan change spurs jump into riskier assets

China yuan change spurs jump into riskier assets
Jun 21, 2010

Yuan depegging long-term positive
Jun 20, 2010

StanChart sees China property prices stabilizing
Jun 15, 2010

Hong Kong auctions land, price beats forecasts
Jun 8, 2010

Quotes

DTZ Holdings PLC
DTZ.L
61.00p
▼ -1.00 ▼ -1.61%
11:27:30 BST

Sun Hung Kai & Co. Limited
0096.HK
HK$4.84
▼ -0.01 ▼ -0.21%
07/19/2010

Capitaland Limited
CATL.SI
$3.78
▼ -0.01 ▼ -0.26%
09:05:05 BST

Login or register

Latest from My Topics

0 Saved Items

Thu, Jul 2, 2010

5. Scene of the crime in Mexico
1:51am BST

BROCHURES PROVIDED BY DIANOMI

ADVERTISEMENT

Online Trading
Request your free brochures on online trading
Free Brochures

Effective Investing
Make the most of your savings and investments
Request Free Guides

Emerging Markets
Get a free emerging markets factsheet from St. James's Place
Get Free Factsheet

Login or register

Latest from My Topics

0 Saved Items